Natural disasters including wildfires, hurricanes and volcanic eruptions displace millions of people around the world and cause community-wide trauma. Sandplay is an expressive, culturally sensitive, trauma-informed therapeutic method that helps children and adults to alleviate symptoms of distress following traumatic events and improve community resilience. Sandplay has been used effectively around the world with communities in crisis. At a time when the world is dealing with the Covid19 pandemic it is all the more important to be prepared to treat the trauma resulting from having gone through this unusual occurrence.

On May 3, 2018 Tutu Pele, the Hawaiian goddess of the volcano took her lava form and erupted forcefully for three months on Hawai'i Island claiming nearly 1,000 homes. As needs for food and shelter were addressed, local sandplay therapists mobilized to provide emotional relief and support. This workshop explores the living mythology of Pele, how she appears in the sandplay images of children and adults, and the use of mobile sandplay therapy in times of community crisis. Participants will view a brief, award-winning documentary film, Fire and Sand and explore the archetypal patterns of destruction and creation as we address Covid-19 and racial injustice in today's world.

Learning Objectives:

1. Identify archetypal patterns in the Pele myth and in today's world crisis.
2. Explore the "living mythology" of Pele in the Hawaiian culture and in sandplay therapy.
3. Identify three ways that sandplay therapy alleviates symptoms of traumatic stress.
4. Distinguish mobile sandplay in relief work from traditional applications of sandplay therapy.

Who should attend: Play/sandplay therapists, social workers, psychologists, or counselors interested in a post-graduate level workshop and in earning training hours toward credentialing as a sandplay therapist.
